

The Horse-Drawn Equipment Exhibit Building

The St. Lawrence Power & Equipment Museum announces its newest venture - a 5,800 square foot exhibit building to preserve and interpret treasures from the era of horse power. This unique building will feature timber frame construction with giant logs cut, sawn, and joined by local craftsmen.

As you enter the building, you will pass by horse stalls and tack rooms. Just beyond you arrive in the main section of the building where massive posts and beams soar above you. From floor to rafters will be buggies, wagons, sleighs, carriages, sleds, stone boats, and implements in profusion. Statues of proud horses dressed in full harness will offer visitors opportunity to see and feel history. From the loft above the entrance you will see all the exhibits below in the main hall and be able to look out across the Museum grounds.

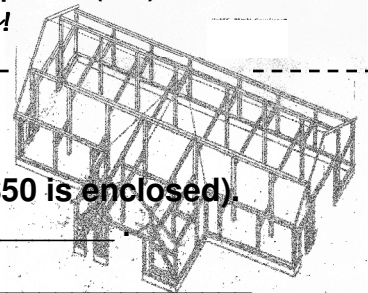

During 2009, the family of P.E. Merrill sent a gift of $74,250 to support construction of a building to celebrate working horses, challenging others to contribute as well. The gift was in memory of Merrill who founded the Merrill Transport Company and who loved work horses. Contributions now total more than $90,000. The projected cost of the building is $148,000. Preparation of the massive timbers is underway, and construction will follow as funds allow. We invite you to support and join us in this exciting project. In appreciation of those who send gifts of $50 or more, the Museum will send a limited-edition, signed and numbered print of the pen and ink drawing above by John Miller III. Each print is on acid-free art paper 9 X 12 inches in area.
